This course introduces students to some critical approaches on how to analyze and critique the popular media from the perspective of textual consumers and therefore examine the possible significant dynamics between those media and culture. The course furnishes students with the knowledge and awareness to become critical consumers and producers of various popular media texts and equips them with the literacies necessary to understand and critique the popular media in their everyday life. Forms of popular media texts may include cinema, graphic novels, advertisements, reality TV shows, docudramas, music videos, photographs, hypertext novels and the cyberspace.

2. Course Intended Learning Outcomes (CILOs)

Upon completion of this course, students will be able to:

- CILO₁ Analyze and articulate the nature, structures and functions of the popular media as rich and complex systems;
- CILO₂ Apply the vocabulary and terminology in film studies for the concepts of deconstruction, such as representations, intertextuality and identities in discussion, presentation and written assignment; and
- CILO₃ Work collaboratively and effectively to read media and various media forms and articulate how they represent issues or topics mentioned in lectures.

Power point presentations are not compulsory but if you feel they are helpful in explaining and highlighting some crucial concepts, feel free to do so. Since we have a big class this time, I am targeting groups of 6-7 people and each reading group session will be around 30 min.	20%	CILO _{1,2,3} CILLO _{1,2}
(b) Students will have to submit a critical written reflection of 500 words on an idea encountered in their assigned presentation reading.	20%	CILO _{1,2,3} CILLO ₂
